Laura Johnson is a rising junior in the College of Arts and Sciences majoring in Science and Technology Studies with a minor in Education. She attended high school in Middletown, NY, graduated in 2008, and started off her college career majoring in Mechanical Engineering. After a freshman year academic switch and the discovery of books about women (or lack thereof) in science written by Professor Williams and Ceci in the Cornell Store, she decided to act on her interest in their field of study and contact Williams and Ceci to inquire about how she could become involved in their research. Starting this past semester, she has enjoyed her position as an Undergrad Researcher/Lab Assistant for the Cornell Institute for Research on Children.
