Rachel leads GlamourGals, a nonprofit organization that inspires and organizes teens to provide complimentary beauty makeovers to women living in senior homes.

PUBLIC SERVICE:
In 2000, as a 17-year-old high school student in Commack, N.Y., Rachel founded GlamourGals as a tribute to her grandmother, Teeny, and a way to unite women across generations and offer young girls leadership opportunities in a fun and creative atmosphere. A decade later, GlamourGals boasts hundreds of volunteers at nearly 40 chapters across the country and overseas.

AT WORK:
Rachel is President and CEO of GlamourGals, where she regularly consults executive and advisory boards and manages full-time employees and volunteers. She oversees a cutting-edge virtual community to mobilize and motivate chapter leaders and mentors teens at leadership institutes and through GlamourGals Hot Pink Leadership programs.

AT CORNELL:
Rachel holds a bachelor’s degree in Policy Analysis and Management from the College of Human Ecology. She credits Cornell with providing the networks and vision to expand GlamourGals, which she continued to oversee as a full-time student. Rachel visits campus frequently to speak about leadership and entrepreneurship and mentor students.

AWARDS:
Rachel has received the first-ever CosmoGirl of the Year Award from CosmoGirl magazine and the National Group Volunteer of the Year Award from the American Health Care Association. She has been featured in many major media outlets for her leadership of GlamourGals, including The Oprah Winfrey Show, Seventeen, and The New York Times.
