CURRENT RESEARCH INTERESTS AND PROJECTS

The Markers of Attachment Projects (MAP): Two overarching goals of this multi-study, multi-method, multi-level project are 1) to identify “markers” of adult attachment bonds and 2) to specify the underlying processes by which such bonds are formed. The studies are based on two assumptions: 1) adult attachment bonds take time to develop; and 2) adult attachment bonds, once formed, will be evident at multiple levels of analysis— affective, behavioral, cognitive and neurobiological. The basic research strategy is a two-phase approach: first, to collect descriptive data relevant to the various levels for the purpose of comparing new romantic relationships to established pair bonds and, second, experimentally manipulate factors associated with adult attachment bond formation to address the question of whether the change is quantitative or qualitative and whether it occurs simultaneously across levels.
