

DESIGN + ENVIRONMENTAL ANALYSIS

College of Human Ecology

Graduate Study in Design + Environmental Analysis

Master of Arts in DESIGN

Two-Year Graduate Program

CONCENTRATION: Design + Health

The Design and Health concentration within the MA in Design focuses on the various ways that the designed environment affects human physical health and mental health, as well as health-related behaviors. Focal context range from home and community, to schools, workplaces, and healthcare settings. Outcomes of interest could include: health-related behaviors such as physical activity and diet; metrics of physical health or recovery from illness; measures of mental health or community cohesion; cognitive functioning, performance, or error-rates; and more.

The Design and Health concentration is appropriate for students who have a prior design degree and are interested in the influence of environment on health-related outcomes.

CAREERS

Students who complete the MA in Design within the Design and Health concentration will be well-positioned for careers focused on environment-health studies and healthcare design research.
